ABSTRACT

This yearbook offers 1986 data on 1,224 community, junior, and technical colleges in the United States. First, introductory material highlights the 2.9% increase in two-year college enrollments between fall 1985 and fall 1986, the increasing enrollment of minority students, and the colleges' total operating budget of an estimated $13.9 billion. A list of the board and staff members of the American Association of Community and Junior Colleges is followed by a historical overview of community college enrollments; an analysis of fall 1986 enrollment by full-/part-time status, sex, and type of institutional control; data on college costs, including average tuition charges in fall 1985 and 1986; information on degrees and certificates awarded; and operating budget averages by income sources. Next, the following information is presented in tabular form for each of the 1,224 colleges, grouped alphabetically first by state and then by territory or country outside the United States: name; location; zip code; chief executive officer; type of institutional control; full-time, part-time, and total enrollment in October 1986 and October 1985; minority enrollment; noncredit enrollment; total degrees awarded; total certificates awarded; number of full-time, part-time, and total faculty; number of professional staff members; number of administrative staff members; and annual tuition charges. Supplementary tables look at enrollments between 1966 and 1986; total and percentage enrollment by sex and race in fall 1985 and 1986; enrollment by type of institutional control; total degrees and certificates awarded; staffing; student costs; average tuition; total annual operating budgets; and enrollment by state. INTRODUCTION

We are pleased to present the 1987 Community, Technical and Junior College Yearbook. This yearbook reports an increase in enrollment for community, technical and junior colleges this year, which reverses a leveling-off trend that has been in effect during the last several years. While some institutions of higher education continue to experience declines in enrollments, the enrollment in community colleges from fall 1985 to fall 1986 rose by 2.9 percent.

In addition, more and more minority students are choosing to enroll in community colleges. A special report included in this yearbook provides details on what some community colleges have been doing to attract more minority students.

In 1986, community colleges had operating budgets totaling an estimated $13.9 billion, another all-time high.

The signs of progress in community, technical, and junior colleges can be traced in this yearbook, which also includes information on students, faculty, degrees, tuition and other aspects of our institutions. Like our yearbooks in the past, this year's report would not be possible without the cooperation and assistance of individual community colleges. The American Association of Community and Junior Colleges conducts a survey each fall to gather information that can be used by colleges and experts in the field. We rely on the colleges to provide us with accurate data for this project.

All 1,224 colleges contributed responses to this year's report. This is the second year that we have asked colleges for information on minority enrollments and operating budgets, an effort to enhance our data collection.

This yearbook is the third in a series of directories published by the AACJC this year. The first two directories are the "1987 AACJC Membership Directory," an exclusive listing of the members of AACJC; and the "1987 AACJC Directory of Community, Technical and Junior Colleges: 1st Edition," a comprehensive listing of administrators in all community colleges, with information about the institutions they serve.

It is hoped that the AACJC publications will help paint a picture of the contributions and services provided to this nation by our community colleges.

OVERVIEW

Monitoring the progress of community, technical and junior colleges has been one of the functions of the American Association of Community and Junior Colleges since its inception. For more than half a century, AACJC has conducted surveys of colleges and branch campuses of universities whose principal degree offering is the associate degree. Traditionally, AACJC has provided the most timely and comprehensive information available about the community college sector.

This latest directory takes a look at the results of the AACJC fall 1986 questionnaire and compares them with results of the fall 1985 questionnaire, as well as data from earlier years. The surveys were sent to 1,224 institutions, including 167 multicollege/ multicampus district offices.

AACJC surveyed all regionally-accredited postsecondary institutions that award associate degrees, including individual two-year colleges, multicollege districts, multicampus districts, multiunit institutions, state and university administrative units, universities and four-year colleges and branches of four-year colleges and universities. All the institutions in the survey reported their total credit enrollment headcount. The response rates were lower for other questions.

A simplified weighting procedure, based on enrollment of reporting colleges, was used to adjust the different return rates for each question. Separate weights were calculated based on the enrollment of reporting institutions for each question. Most numbers presented in this section are weighted. Blanks in some of the tables mean that not enough data were available to complete those particular items.

A historical perspective, dealing with the last two decades, opens the statistical analysis.

An overview provides enrollment figures for community, technical, and junior colleges during the last 20 years. Enrollment figures are also broken down into categories of sex, race and type of institution, namely public, independent, church-related and proprietary. Also provided are figures dealing with the number of staff members working at community, technical and junior colleges; the number of associate degrees and certificates awarded by the institutions; and college costs, revenue sources and operating budgets.

Individual states are then compared in the areas of enrollment, associate degrees awarded, revenue sources and average tuition.

Historical Perspective:

Twenty years ago, the sector of higher education made up of community, technical and junior colleges was enjoying phenomenal increases in enrollment and new community colleges were rapidly being founded across the United States. Between 35 to 60 new community colleges opened each year in the 1960s. This tremendous growth resulted from the increasing acceptance of the community college concept as well as demand for a college education by the swelling baby-boom generation. During the late 1960s, enrollment continued to grow, particularly in public community colleges. The number of church-related and independent institutions was decreasing slightly, as was enrollment in such colleges.

In the meantime, technical institutes were becoming recognized institutions of higher education. The number of multicampus and multicollege institutions was also on the rise. Statistics showed that an increasing percentage of students were beginning their postsecondary work in community, technical, or junior colleges.

By the end of the 1960s, enrollment was still on the rise and the number of community colleges continued to grow. The proportion of the population served by community colleges increased substantially in all 50 states during the 1960s. Public community colleges continued to show the greatest annual growth, while enrollment in independent colleges stabilized by the end of the decade.

In the early 1970s, some of the larger community colleges started to experience slight declines in enrollments. The community college boom of the 1960s had subsided, but overall enrollment was still on the rise. The enrollment growth in the early 1970s was attributed to an emphasis on community-based education and its influence on part-time enrollment.

In the mid 1970s, enrollment in both private and public community colleges rose again as a result of adults returning to or starting college, and unemployed workers turning to institutions for retraining. In addition, many younger students were entering their hometown colleges rather than leaving town for more expensive colleges and universities.

From 1975 to 1976, the enrollment increase in community colleges was less than 1 percent. Some observers noted that state funds for two-year colleges had lessened and enrollment of veterans was on the decline. Yearly tuition and fees were also higher. As the 1970s progressed, more women and part-time students were enrolling, trends that are still in effect today. At the same time, enrollment of men and full-time students decreased.

In the fall of 1978, enrollment dropped 1 percent, the first enrollment decline for community colleges since the 1950s. But enrollment was up again in fall of 1979 and colleges reported growing participation in service, recreational and life enrichment programs that were not part of credit programs. When enrollment increased in the fall of 1980, college officials attributed the growth to more emphasis on recruiting and improved marketing techniques; the state of the economy, with unemployment resulting in higher enrollments; addition of new campuses and facilities; curriculum additions; improved enrollment procedures; and increases in adult attendance.

By the early 1980s, community college enrollment was still on the rise, despite trends of lower enrollments for colleges and universities in general. Then in the falls of 1983, 1984, and 1985, community, technical, and junior colleges also reported declines in enrollment and in the number of institutions. However, there continued to be an increase in the number of minority students and in the number of associate degrees and certificates being awarded by community colleges.

In the fall of 1986, community colleges once again reported an overall increase in enrollment.

FALL 1986 ENROLLMENT

Between fall 1985 and fall 1986 enrollment increased almost 3 percent at community, technical, and junior colleges. Total credit headcount enrollment for fall 1986 was 4,890,664, compared with 4,751,903 in fall 1985 and 4,836,819 in fall 1984. Enrollment increased in 28 states, dropped in 21 states and remained the same in one state.

Public colleges had a 2.9 percent increase in enrollment from fall 1985 to fall 1986, and independent colleges had a 1.9 percent increase during the same period. Enrollment was also up overall for proprietary colleges, but church-related colleges experienced an overall enrollment decline.

California led the nation in the number of students enrolled in community, technical and junior colleges, both public and independent. Other states with high enrollment numbers include Texas, Illinois, New York, Florida, Michigan, Virginia, Arizona and Ohio. States with the lowest enrollment include South Dakota, Montana, Vermont, New Hampshire, North Dakota and Delaware.

The overall enrollment of women and men in community, technical and junior colleges increased, as did overall enrollments for part-time students and minorities. However, overall enrollments dropped for full-time students.

The states with the largest numbers of minority students in community, technical and junior colleges included California, Texas, Illinois and Florida.

Associate Degrees: Approximately 418,520 associate degrees were awarded by community, technical and junior colleges in 1985–1986, compared with an estimated 431,125 associate degrees in 1984–1985. Public colleges awarded fewer degrees while independent colleges awarded more degrees than in 1984–1985. California, New York, Alabama, Illinois and Florida were the states awarding the most associate degrees. An estimated 175,483 associate degrees in general education programs were awarded in 1985–1986, compared with 177,978 in 1984–1985. Associate degrees in occupational education programs numbered approximately 243,036 in 1985–1986, compared with 253,146 in fall 1985.

Certificates: Certificates awarded by community, technical and junior colleges totaled approximately 131,531 in 1985–1986, compared with 136,513 in 1984–1985. Public colleges awarded fewer certificates while independent colleges awarded more certificates.

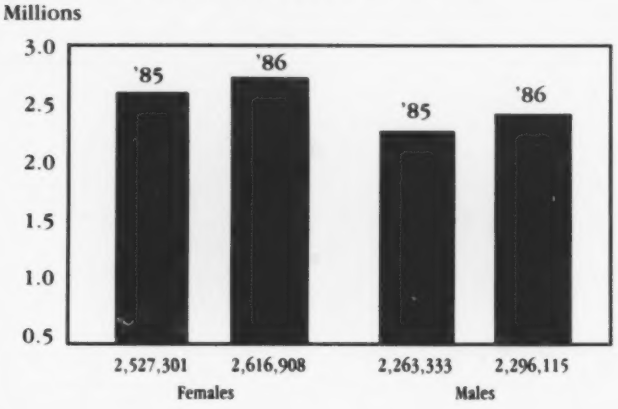
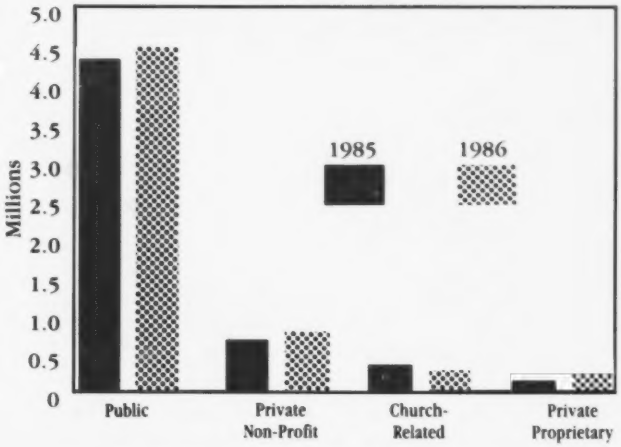
Community, Technical and Junior Colleges: Enrollment by Sex, Fall 1985 and Fall 1986



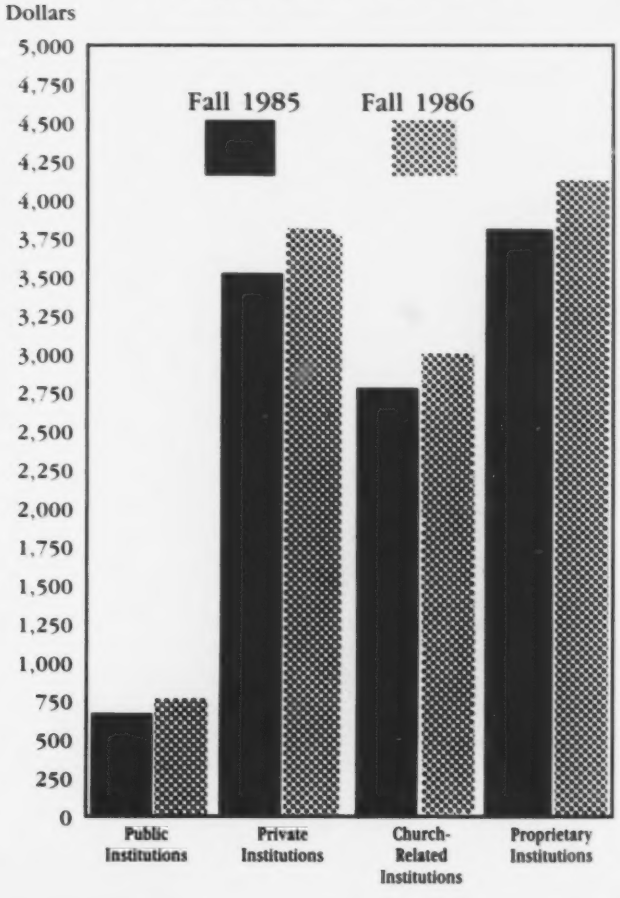
Community, Technical and Junior Colleges: Enrollment by Type of Control, Fall 1985 and Fall 1986



Staff Positions: More people had staff positions in community, technical and junior colleges in fall 1986 than in fall 1985, with the overall estimated figures increasing from 319,776 to 322,666. The number of women with administrative jobs in the colleges increased from fall 1985 to fall 1986, while the number of men with administrative jobs decreased. There were more men and women with professional jobs in the colleges in fall 1986. The number of women with full-time faculty positions dropped, but the number of men with full-time faculty positions increased. The number of women with part-time faculty positions increased and the number of men with part-time faculty positions decreased.

College Costs: Tuition costs, board expenses and dormitory charges all showed overall increases in community, technical and junior colleges from fall 1985 to fall 1986. Tuition was up in public, independent and church-related colleges, as were board expenses and dormitory charges. Fees were higher in all types of institutions, except for independent colleges, where fees were lower.

Average Tuition at Community, Technical and Junior Colleges, Fall 1985 and Fall 1986



The average annual tuition charge for community, technical and junior colleges in 1986–87 was approximately $1,007. The average tuition charge in a public college was $686, while the average tuition was $3,804 in an independent college, $2,983 in a church-related college and $4,052 in a proprietary college.

Average tuition costs in public community colleges were highest in Vermont, New Hampshire, Ohio, Maine and New York and lowest in California, Texas, Hawaii, North Carolina and Arizona. Tuition costs in independent colleges were highest in Connecticut, Massachusetts and Michigan and lowest in West Virginia, South Dakota and Montana. Tuition costs in church-related colleges were highest in Michigan, Iowa and Pennsylvania and lowest in Idaho, Oklahoma and Ohio. In proprietary colleges, tuition costs were highest in Oregon and lowest in Louisiana.

Operating Budgets: Based on weighted figures, we estimate that the operating budgets for community, technical and junior colleges in fall 1986 totaled to $13.9 billion, compared with $13.3 billion in fall 1985. Federal revenue, as a percent of operating revenue, dropped overall for community, technical and junior colleges while the percentage of operating funds from state and local sources increased. The percentage of operating income provided by tuition increased as well.

According to the colleges in the survey, 7.38 percent of the operating budgets in fall 1986 was funded through federal income sources, 48.89 percent by state income sources, 23.37 percent by local taxes and 17.43 percent by tuition. A state-by-state breakdown shows that the percentage of operating income supplied by federal sources for public colleges was highest in Tennessee colleges—about 37 percent. In contrast, only about 1 percent of operating income in Maryland and Minnesota colleges came from federal sources.

The percentage of operating income supplied by state sources for public colleges was highest in North Carolina, at about 75 percent. The lowest percentage of state sources in the United States was in Washington, with about eight percent.

The percentage of operating income supplied by local sources for public colleges was highest in Kansas, at about 53 percent and lowest in Indiana and Georgia, both at about one percent. The percentage of operating income furnished by tuition was highest in Pennsylvania, at about 30 percent, and lowest in Washington, with about one percent.
